

Welcome to Saxony-Anhalt, welcome to the heart of Germany!

Discover nature in all its glory in the magical Harz region, arrange a date at Naumburg Cathedral with Uta, the most beautiful woman of the Middle Ages, or soak up the twilight in the incomparably beautiful Garden Kingdom Dessau Wörlitz from a gondola. In Saxony-Anhalt, your holiday dreams can come true.

Garden landscapes dating from the Age of Enlightenment, medieval towns and landmarks in architectural history – ideas that changed the world originated in what is now Saxony-Anhalt. Nearly 7,000 years of fascinating history and a cultural heritage of European and global significance place Saxony-Anhalt at the very heart of German history. This is where Martin Luther lived and worked. This is the homeland of the Nebra Sky Disc, the world's most famous depiction of the cosmos. And here, at the Bauhaus, this is where design history was written.

Saxony-Anhalt is home to so many UNESCO World Heritage Sites, and there are very few regions which have enchanting palaces and castles, impressive churches and historic parks and gardens situated so close to one another. The many places that bear witness to Germany's unique cultural heritage make Saxony-Anhalt the perfect destination for a tour of discovery that will appeal to all your senses.

Stroll through the narrow alleyways of the picturesque medieval towns of the Harz Mountains or make your way through the bustling streets of the big cities of Halle (Saale) and Magdeburg – for many visitors these contrasts create an extraordinary experience.

In Saxony-Anhalt, culture and nature are united in a unique harmony. Whatever your passion – hiking, cycling, horse riding or water sports – in Saxony-Anhalt you can pursue it to the fullest. And after your active and adventurous day, you can enjoy the region's culinary specialities.

The Green Citadel of Magdeburg

The many attractions of this metropolis on the Elbe reflect Magdeburg's eventful past and present. Visitors to the state capital can immerse themselves in the over 1,200-year-old city and go on a fascinating journey of discovery.

Magdeburg's best-known attractions include the St. Maurice and St. Catherine Cathedral and the art museum at the Monastery of Our Lady. Magdeburg Cathedral is in fact Germany's first Gothic cathedral and is the final resting place of Emperor Otto the Great and his wife Edith. As well as historical sites, Magdeburg also has modern attractions to offer visitors, such as Magdeburg's Waterway Junction – the world's longest aqueduct. The last structure designed and created by architect Friedensreich Hundertwasser, known as the Green Citadel, can also be found in Magdeburg. Since its completion in 2005, it has dominated the cityscape with its golden globes. Next to the cathedral, it is the city's biggest tourist magnets.

The 60-meter-high wooden Jahrtausendturm (Millennium Tower) contains five stories exhibiting 6,000 years of human history in the fields of science and technology.

The State Museum of Prehistory Halle (Saale)

Halle is a city brimming with charm, art and design. In its picturesque setting on the River Saale, its historical Old Town, some of Europe's finest museums, and its parks and colourful pub districts warmly welcome visitors.

Today Moritzburg Castle, once the residence of archbishops, is one of Germany's most important museums of modern 20th-century art. The building is home to a collection of around 250,000 works of art, from the classical to the contemporary. Visitors can currently view more than 500 works over a surface area of 3,000 square meters on three stories. With its new collection, "Paths to the Modern Age", the Art Museum of Saxony-Anhalt presents its unique treasures against a fascinating architectural backdrop and in a modern, ground-breaking setting.

The Francke Foundations, Pietist educational establishments founded by August Hermann Francke in 1698, still house numerous social and educational facilities today. In just a few years, this school complex evolved into Europe's most impressive educational center. The exhibitions in the Historic Orphanage, the library in the "Lindenhof" courtyard with its stage-set shelving, and the Cabinet of Wonders in Francke's former home are especially worth a visit.

Germany's answer to the Mona Lisa is Uta of Naumburg. Her statue in Naumburg Cathedral is one of 12 that are carved in the 13th-century by an anonymous stonemason, dubbed the Naumburg Master. Legend has it that Uta was the inspiration for the evil queen in Walt Disney's 1937 film, Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs.

the foot of the Mittelberg hill, where the Nebra Sky Disc was once discovered by unlicensed treasure hunters. The bronze disc inlaid with gold symbols features nothing less than the world's oldest concrete depiction of the cosmos

Unlike a traditional museum, the Nebra Ark Visitor Center has a Planetarium where visitors can watch a show about the Sky Disc, which was a key find for archaeology, astronomy, and religious history. The symbols on the Sky Disc represent the full moon or sun, the lunar crescent, and the Pleiades in a stylized depiction of the night sky. Two arcs along the sides marking the angle between the winter and summer solstices, and also a solar boat, were added

Like the full moon or sun and the lunar crescent, the cluster of stars known as the Pleiades was an important feature of the rural calendar for Bronze Age farmers for timing their sowing and harvesting. The Visitor Center uses a sophisticated and entertaining multimedia presentation to portray the meaning of the Sky Disc and inform visitors in a playful way. Virtual, ghost-like figures wander through the showcases giving scientific information to visitors with wit and charm.

The "whodunnit" around the discovery of the Sky Disc is presented in a Punch and Judy show. Large sculptures reveal deeper dimensions of the find. The Planetarium Show takes viewers back to the universe of the Bronze Age. The original Sky Disc can be seen in the State Museum of Prehistory in Halle (Saale)

Its architecture, stained glass and sculptural art are totally unique. It features two impressive rood screens that separate the choir from the nave. But its greatest attraction are the twelve figures of benefactors. These are so lifelike and expressive that no visitor can fail to be entranced, particularly by the figure of Uta, said to symbolize the "most beautiful woman of the Middle Ages". The figures were created by the Naumburg Master, who also contributed his craft to the cathedrals of Amiens and Reims in France. A tour of the cathedral to view the vault with its sacred treasures, is highly recommended. Here, you can marvel at around 30 works, such as Lucas Cranach the Elder's graceful Mary Magdalene, the Naumburg Pietà, and the Johannesschale (head of John the Baptist). Wittenberg is home to the world's largest museum of Reformation history, the Lutherhaus. The Reformer lived here, first as a monk and later as husband and father, and this is where he composed his writings and taught his students. The permanent exhibition in the Lutherhaus not only recalls the Reformer's life and work, it also delves into his everyday family life and the rich history around the propagation of his ideas. Museum highlights include the original parish church pulpit from which Luther used to preach, a Lucas Cranach tablet-piece depicting the Ten Commandments, and an authentic monk's habit worn by Luther himself. The centerpiece of any tour of the house, however, is the Lutherstube (Luther Room), which has largely been preserved in its original form. An absolute must-see for any visitor to Wittenberg is the door of the castle church, to which Luther nailed his 95 Theses in 1517.

Martin Luther was born to parents Hans and Margarete on November 10 1483, in Eisleben, as the first of nine children. The world-renowned Reformer also died here in 1546. The exhibition, "I come from here – Martin Luther and Eisleben", in Luther's Birthplace recounts Luther's origins and depicts life in the Middle Ages. The Luther family home has been recreated with historical furniture. Martin Luther was baptized in the Gothic Church of St. Peter and Paul on November 11, 1483. Today, the baptistery offers themed tours, prayer meetings, and school projects about the sacrament of baptism.

In the house where Luther died, the exhibition, "Luther's final journey", recounts the Reformer's last trip to Eisleben and his final days there. A monument to Luther in Eisleben's market square commemorates the town's most famous son.

One of the most important landmarks for anyone who visits Mansfeld is the former home of Luther's parents, Hans and Margarethe Luder. The exhibition, "I am a child of Mansfeld", details the family's daily life, Luther's experiences at school, and his childhood in general. The exhibition displays significant archaeological artifacts, such as the marbles Luther once played with. Luther's parents' house was extensively renovated in 2014 and a modern museum building was added. Archaeological excavations took place during the renovation. Hundreds of the objects found – like a cooking pot and a spigot – can now be viewed as part of the exhibition. Only the foundations remain of what was once the first school Luther attended. Nevertheless, every year on the first Saturday after Easter, his enrollment is re-enacted and celebrated at the site.

CULTURE QUEDLINBURG

Half-timbered architecture in Quedlinburg

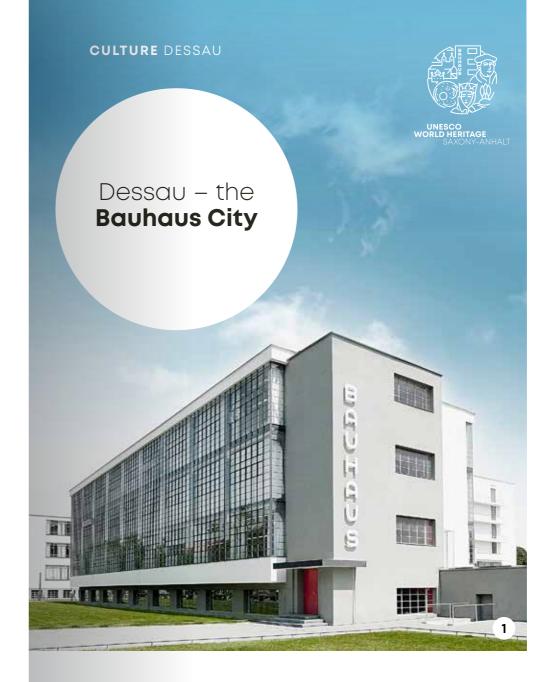

Visitors to the World Heritage City of Quedlinburg can take a fascinating trip through time as they stroll around the Old Town, taking in winding alleyways, ancient cobblestones and, presiding over it all, the castle hill.

The Romanesque Collegiate Church of St. Servatius and its neighboring collegiate buildings are visible from afar and constitute one of Germany's most important collegiate complexes. The castle hill is among the most significant of authentic medieval history sites and, under the Ottonian kings and emperors, was also the center of European political power.

Here, more than 1,100 years ago, the Saxon duke Henry was crowned king. As King Henry I, he was one of the most important historical figures in the history of Saxony-Anhalt. In the Collegiate Church of St. Servatius, visitors can see the royal tombs of Henry I and his wife Matilda, and also the famous cathedral treasury, with precious objects that reflect the glory of the royal household.

But the greatest attraction is the city itself. In an area covering a good 80 hectares, visitors can marvel at more than 2,000 picturesque half-timbered houses. Buildings from eight centuries, adorned with intricate carvings, provide examples of all styles and recount tales from the Renaissance, the Baroque, the Rococo, and Classicism. This unique variety makes Quedlinburg the epitome of a European medieval town and one of Germany's largest heritage areas. The Old Town, Collegiate Church and castle have been UNESCO World Heritage Sites since 1994.

Dessau was at the heart of a brand-new design and architectural movement that still affects the way we live today.

Founded in Weimar, the Bauhaus (it translates as "Building School") took root in Dessau. Between 1925 and 1932, this school of design brought together architects, artists, and designers – and its legacy continues in the 21st century! No wonder it is yet another of Saxony-Anhalt's UNESCO World Heritage Sites. The Bauhaus philosophy addressed several aspects and problems of modern life. One of the primary themes was: How to maintain the human element in an age of increasing industrialization.

The founder and first director was Walter Gropius (1883–1969), who later moved to the U.S. He was followed by two more significant architects, Hannes Meyer (1889–1954) and Ludwig Mies van der Rohe (1886–1969). By bringing together art, craft, and technology, the Bauhaus aimed to create new designs for new ways of living. Bauhaus professors and students valued simplicity; they rejected the elaborate detail of the popular late-19th- and early-20th-century Art Art Nouveau style. Typical Bauhaus buildings were cubic in shape, with flat roofs and plain façades.

Open-plan rooms and offices were the norm; chairs, tables, and other furniture were functional and quite simplistic. The modern materials and modern manufacturing techniques that were used could be produced on an industrial scale and relatively cheaply. So, good design did not have to be the prerogative of the wealthy; it could be afforded by ordinary people.

The Bauhaus movement included every facet of the fine and the applied arts. From architecture and interior, graphic and industrial design to painting and sculpture, all of these disciplines showed the influence of this innovative school. For example, tubular steel furniture in what is now referred to as the "Bauhaus style" has become a timeless classic, the great-grandfather of designs that are produced today and appreciated the world over. Saxony-Anhalt continues to be a cultural treasure chest for architects and designers. Not only does Dessau boast the world's largest concentration of original Bauhaus architecture, but the Bauhaus Dessau Foundation continues to be a center of research, teaching, and experimental design.

With splendid Baroque gardens, world-famous landscaped parks, and idyllic grounds filled with botanical abundance: Saxony-Anhalt is an ideal destination for park lovers.

In the year 2000, the state of Saxony-Anhalt launched a hitherto unique project: it chose the most beautiful and significant parks to represent the regions approx. 1,000 garden landscapes and brought them together in the Garden Dreams tourist network of historic parks in Saxony-Anhalt.

ELBE CYCLE ROUTE

This cycle path follows the river through Saxony-Anhalt for around 206 miles. It winds its way past the UNESCO World Heritage Sites of Bauhaus Dessau, the Dessau-Wörlitz Garden Kingdom, and the Luther sites in Wittenberg. It also traverses the UNESCO Middle Elbe Biosphere Reserve. A variety of cultural offerings and attractions invite cyclists to take some wonderful little detours along the way.

It's impossible to resist falling under the spell of Wörlitz Park's beauty and splendor. The Garden Kingdom of Dessau-Wörlitz – a unique, self-contained landscape of gardens and castles – still enchants countless visitors today. Prince Leopold III, Duke of Anhalt-Dessau, was a devoted enthusiast of the Enlightenment and humanism, and a lover of England. It was he who first ordered the creation of the Wörlitz cultural landscape in 1764. His idea was to combine beauty with usefulness, and create a harmonious alliance between humankind and nature. In the years that followed, Wörlitz Park was born: Central Europe's first landscaped park based on the English model.

Here, the gardens, avenues and castles of the Garden Kingdom spring so naturally out of the meadows that the entire park landscape seems to stretch into infinity. Amongst it all is Wörlitz Castle, considered the founding building of German Classicism. The UNESCO World Heritage Committee declared the Dessau-Wörlitz Garden Kingdom a World Heritage Site in 2000. Meadows in bloom, whispering forests, fragrant flowers, glistening lakes and canals all entice visitors to walk, hike, cycle, horse-ride, or take a trip in a gondola or cruise boat.

The joy of nature - Harz National Park

The Harz Mountains are one of Germany's most popular hiking regions. From a leisurely stroll on a Sunday afternoon to a sporty hike along the Harzer-Hexen-Stieg (Harz Witches' Trail) – in the Harz Mountains you can enjoy your vacation, experience pure nature, and reconnect with your senses.

A well-signposted network of over 5,000 miles of hiking trails makes the Harz Mountains a hiker's paradise. Short or long distances, narrow footpaths or well-maintained hiking trails, challenging or easy routes – here you're sure to find the right route for you. And there's no need to worry about board and lodging. Numerous hotels in the immediate vicinity of the most beautiful hiking trails are especially geared to Harz hikers.

At 1,141 meters, the Brocken is the highest peak in the Harz, and from the summit you can enjoy magnificent panoramic views across the whole region. A trip up the Brocken is one of the highlights of any stay in the Harz. Well-known travelers like Johann Wolfgang von Goethe and Heinrich Heine drew their inspirations from this very summit. The "most German of all the mountains", as Heine called the Brocken's summit, has some special features: it is geographically located on the former East-West German border and, as a military exclusion zone from 1961 to 1989, was not open to the public. Its position and altitude in northern Germany bring harsh winds and cold temperatures at times, comparable to the mountains of Iceland.

Every year, during the night from April 30 to May 1, the witches of Walpurgis gather from all four cardinal directions on the Witches' Dance Floor ("Hexentanzplatz") near Thale in the Harz region. Walpurgis Night celebrates spring and the coming of summer in the Nordic countries, According to legend, witches would first meet at the Witches' Dance Floor to then fly together to the Blocksberg mountain, better known as the Brocken, where Lord Urian, the devil, awaits them for a jamboree. Locals, meanwhile, ward off evil by lighting bonfires!. Every year, Walpurgis Night is celebrated in over 20 towns in the Harz region.

Enjoy the "Tuscany of the North"

A visit to the region of Saale-Unstrut offers a diverse range of experiences – for hikers and cyclists as well as for fans of culture and wine. The sunny wine-growing area between the Saale and Unstrut rivers is blessed with lovely landscapes, a wealth of history, and a lively cultural scene.

Lush vineyards grace the Saale-Unstrut countryside – the northernmost region in Germany to produce quality wine. The area is also frequently referred to as the "Tuscany of the North". The roads and rivers winding through the landscape encourage you to go on a walk

Today, the region has over 50 flourishing vineyards.
A long, ambling walk or cycle ride past the vineyards, including wine-tasting in one of the cellars, is highly recommended.

For those wanting to combine an active holiday with pleasure, the Saale-Unstrut Wine Road, about 40 miles long, is ideal. Starting in Memleben, it leads you past towns such as Nebra, Laucha, Freyburg, and Naumburg until finally ending in Bad Sulza.

The rivers are another popular feature of this charming area. You could take a leisurely boat ride along the Saale or go kayaking on the Unstrut – numerous docks, launching sites and picnic spots on the banks were designed with water sport fans in mind. These are perfect conditions for experiencing the south of Saxony-Anhalt from the water.

The second-largest tributary to the Elbe, the 258-milelong Saale, is perfect for a river cruise. Board a boat with the whole family, sit back and relax, and let the vineyards, medieval palaces and castles glide past.

You could also go on a hiking tour to discover the Saale-Unstrut-Triasland or Lower Saale Valley Nature Parks. Furthermore, you may want to find out facts about the area's geology or take part in plant-themed hikes like the "Spring Orchid Tour."

Food and Wine

In Saxony-Anhalt, food and drink are very much an integral part of the culture.

If you open up this treasure chest, you will find all the ingredients you need for a delicious meal, along with a glass of wine or a refreshing beer. Long known for its rich soil, Saxony-Anhalt has a tradition of farming that produces everything from mouth-watering fresh asparagus in May to fine beef from Harz highland cattle, plus goose and game in the fall. Dishes special to the region range from pork with plums to chicken stuffed with beets and from roasted bratwurst (sausages) to Dessauer Speckkuchen, a bacon quiche from Dessau. In the Saale-Unstrut vineyards, wine festivals are held in August and September to celebrate the grape harvest.

Harz Cheese

Produced using traditional recipes, Harz cheese is naturally low in fat and high in protein, making it as healthy as it is delicious. Golden yellow and with a strong aroma, the cheese is either plain or flavored with caraway. Many farmers still make it by hand. This artisan version is labeled Bauernhandkäse or Handkäse.

Baumkuchen

A favorite throughout Saxony-Anhalt, and in Salzwedel in particular, the Baumkuchen is baked over an open wood fire. The name literally means "tree cake", and it is made in the old-fashioned way by pouring layer upon layer of batter onto a vertical spit fire – creating a delicious "tree-shaped" treat.

Halloren Chocolates

Halloren is the oldest chocolate maker in Germany and is based in Halle (Saale). Now well over 200 years old, the company is best known for its Halloren Kugel, a chocolate ball that comes in a variety of flavors: strawberry, cherry, blackcurrant, and more.

Cheers!

The people of Saxony-Anhalt enjoy sharing the good things in life with friends and visitors. Hasseröder, one of Germany's best-selling beers, has been brewed in Wernigerode since 1872. Wines are also produced in the Saale-Unstrut region. With its red foil top, the most famous is the Champagne-style Rotkäppchen (meaning Little Red Riding Hood), which was first made in Freyburg in 1856. Today, this is one of Germany's biggest selling sparkling wines. And, at the end of a meal, locals will often offer guests Schierker Feuerstein, a herbal liqueur originally distilled in the town of Schierke in the Harz Mountains.
